1. My life has meaning only if God exists.
2. Suicide is never the best choice.
3. Knowing that I would live just one more day would not undermine my ability to enjoy that day.
4. God exists and watches over me.
5. There is a heaven.
6. It is wrong to criticize other cultures.
7. It is wrong to judge other people's actions.
8. The moral principles that I was raised to believe are the right ones.
9. I make free choices; all my choices are up to me.
10. My future is completely determined by my past.

Fundamental vs. Non-Fundamental Beliefs

- Your fundamental beliefs are the ones that you use to support other non-fundamental beliefs.
- Let us consider two examples, one about health, the other about relationships.

Reflection Time

- List down some of your fundamental beliefs and how they support some of your non-fundamental beliefs.

Reflection Time

- List down some of your fundamental beliefs and how they support some of your non-fundamental beliefs.

Where did these beliefs come from?

- Can you recall acquiring these beliefs from serious reflection?
- Are these beliefs really your own?
- Would you have chosen these beliefs if you had been given a choice before they were imposed upon you?
- Why do you want to hold on to them?

Liberation

- Philosophy teaches us 1) how to investigate the compatibility between our non-fundamental and fundamental beliefs, that is, it teaches us how to identify what our fundamental beliefs require of us. 2) It teaches us how to investigate our fundamental beliefs.
- As such, philosophy frees us from a sort of dogmatism that would otherwise overtake our minds by passively holding beliefs that we have never examined.
- As a result, we become freed from the beliefs that have been forced upon us and come to possess beliefs that we can truly call our own.
