

Similarities and Differences

- A fundamental motivation for realism:
 - 1. There are mind-independent facts about ways in which things are both similar to and different from one another.
 - 2. These facts about similarity and differences have a mind-independent explanation.
 - 3. The only feasible explanation requires the existence of universals that similar entities share and dissimilar entities fail to share.

